

Michael Leathes has been a constant user of international dispute resolution services (litigation, mediation, conciliation and arbitration) throughout his 40 year career as an in-house corporate lawyer with such companies as Pfizer, Gillette, British American Tobacco, and International Distillers & Vintners. Latterly, he was one of the founders of the International Mediation Institute in 2007 and served on the IMI Board until May 2015. In April 2013 Michael was appointed a member of the International Commercial Mediation Working Group established by Chief Justice Menon to make recommendations for developing Singapore into a centre for international commercial mediation. He subsequently served for an initial period on the Board of the Singapore International Mediation Institute. Michael was admitted to the English Bar in 1970 and to the New York State Bar in 1984 and holds an LL.M in European Law from the University of Exeter (1972). Michael is currently writing a book to be published by Kluwer Law International on negotiation skills for in-house lawyers.
